

Contents

Figures	7
Tables	9
Boxes	10
Preface	11
Chapter 1. What is politics?	13
1.1. Why does politics exist? The origins of politics	13
1.2. The rights of the state and the rights of individuals	15
1.3. Definitions of politics	19
Chapter 2. Basic concepts of politics and political science.	25
2.1. Development of political science	25
2.2. Political science within social sciences.	27
2.3. Kinds of states, governments and political systems	31
2.4. Historical evolution of democratic processes	37
2.5. Measuring democracy	41
Chapter 3. Characteristics of democratic systems	47
3.1. Presidential and parliamentary systems	47
3.2. Legislative assemblies	48
3.3. Electoral market in democracies	53
3.4. Kinds of political parties	55
3.5. Ways of financing the political parties	57
3.6. Legislative elections	61
3.7. Term limits: populism or effective change?	65
Chapter 4. Politics and social needs	71
4.1. Human needs and economic development	71
4.2. Measurement of development	75
4.3. Public choice theory on beneficiaries of economic policy	81
4.4. The behaviour of voters	87

Chapter 5. Normative elements of public and economic policy	91
5.1. What is public policy?	91
5.2. Endogenous context of public policymaking	94
5.3. Government, its goals and decisions on policy	97
5.4. Kinds of public policies and relations between them.	102
5.5. Economies and economic policy in social sciences	107
5.6. Relations between political economy, economic policy and economics	110
Chapter 6. Introduction to the positive theory of economic policy	115
6.1. Relations between elections and economic situation.	115
6.2. Economic impact of democracy and its elements	120
6.3. Introduction to the political business cycle	125
6.4. Kinds of political business cycles.	128
6.5. Empirical verification	132
6.6. Central bank independence and macroeconomic results	137
6.7. Partisan central bank hypothesis	140
References.	143